Abstracts

Milk powder, which is prepared by evaporating milk, is extensively used as a milk replacer. The primary purpose of drying milk is preservation, as the process extends the shelf life of the product. Milk powder has low moisture content and does not need to be refrigerated. Moreover, it is non-perishable and widely used in different types of food and beverages. The production of milk powder involves the removal of water at the lowest possible cost under stringent hygiene conditions and also ensuring that all the natural properties of milk, such as flavor and nutritional value, are retained in the milk powder.
