Abstracts

The dental ultrasonic baths uses the high-frequency oscillation signal emitted by the ultrasonic generator to be converted into a high-frequency mechanical oscillation by the transducer and propagated to the medium-cleaning solution, and the ultrasonic waves are radiated in the cleaning liquid in a dense manner. The liquid flows to generate tens of thousands of tiny bubbles which form and grow in the negative pressure region of the longitudinal long wave of the ultrasonic wave and close rapidly in the positive pressure region. In this process, the bubble closes to form an instantaneous high pressure of more than 1000 atmospheres. The continuous high pressure is like a series of small 'explosions' that continuously impact the surface of the object, so that the dirt on the surface of the teeth and the gap can be quickly peeled off, thereby achieving the purpose of purifying the surface of the tooth.
