DL-methionine, also known as methionine, is an essential amino acid in all post-lives. Together with cysteine, methionine is one of two sulfur-containing proteinogenic amino acids. It is the only sulfur-containing essential amino acid for humans, and it has two types, L-form and D-form, which are closely related to the metabolism of various sulfur-containing compounds (such as proteins) in living organisms. It is the main source of active methyl and sulfur in the body.
