Abstracts

Educational Travel also called as edu-tourism is a sub type of the travel and tourism sector. Educational tourism could be referred to as an approach for pursuing education, carrying out research activities and knowledge acquisition. This sector is acquiring popularity these days and is a fast growing sub-sector in the travel and tourism industry. As far as academics are concerned, this sector has vast scope and is changing the dynamics of the sector constantly; it is more of a perspective type of tourism. Educational Travel is also called by other names such as job development, career enhancement or self-actualisation experience. The idea is that apart from self-improvement, travel can be relaxation, learning can be more fun than ever and there is no age bar restricting people from learning by travelling (this does not include people who wish to travel for educational purposes but are unable to travel due to health problems).

Educational cruises, school trips, seminar vacations, study abroad experiences and self enhancement vacations are few examples of educational tourism. Knowledge can be imparted in a much better manner apart from sitting in one corner and reading books. Practicality is far better than theory. Educational tourism does not depend upon weather; a proper infrastructure should be in place and you are good to go! The main focus is to apply the knowledge and skills learnt within the classroom environment in a totally diverse environment, like the “International Practicum Training Program”. The structure of educational tourism recognises three aspects – the science of tourism, the science of education and the aspects of the external environment. Implementation of educational excursions that provide good opportunities for the development of students by enhancing their research and observation skills to broaden their experience is the most popular form of educational tourism. It helps in developing a scientific approach towards the world and a responsible and conscious attitude towards nature and the environment.
