Abstracts

Hot dip galvanizing is special method, where zinc-iron alloy layers are formed by a metallurgical process. A clean steel is soaked in molten zinc, providing a protective coating to the steel. As zinc is more active as compared to the steel, in situation of electric-chemical corrosion, zinc undergoes corrosion first and protects steel pipe. Hot-dip galvanized steel is used in a wide range of industries, including agriculture, automotive, construction, solar, telecommunication, and many more.
