Abstracts

The labor force is an economic designation for a social group with the potential to be employed. In countries with sound legal systems, there are strict legal regulations on the age at which one can legally be employed. Generally, the lower limit of the allowable working age and the retirement age is stipulated. All social groups with the potential to be employed can be called 'labor forces', including those who have already worked and people who are temporarily unemployed but looking for work. The use value of labor power is the ability of laborers to perform productive labor, and its use or consumption process is the labor process of workers.
