Abstracts

Road maintenance is defined as preserving and keeping the serviceable conditions road as normal as possible and practicable. The main objectives of road maintenance men are the allocation of available maintenance resources according to actual needs and priorities. If the maintenance works are not done at all or done faulty or the pavement structure inadequate for present-day and loading.

The road maintenance consists of correcting deficiencies in the highway which have developed as the result of age, wear, weather and damage and taking steps to prevent or delay the development of other deficiencies. In this way, there are two types of maintenance, namely, preventive and breakdown. In preventive maintenance, an attempt is made to anticipate potential failure and to do something to prevent or delay the failure. In breakdown maintenance, the failure has already occurred and steps or measures must be taken to determine and correct the cause as well as to repair the damage that has taken place.

Road maintenance is affected by budget restrictions, political influences, and numerous environmental and other variables. All these factors must be suitably accommodated in the highway system. As new needs are emerging, the maintenance procedures are also kept changing. For instance, precast pavement sections have been developed to provide a prompt replacement of localized sections of deteriorated pavement with minimum interference with the flow of traffic. The report studies the global road repairs and maintenance market.
