Abstracts

Still wine is a type of table wine that is absent of any carbon dioxide which is what makes them still, not bubbly, sparkling or fizzy. Carbon dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>) is a part of the fermentation process and is released when yeast and sugar mix, so all wines at one point in their development have bubbles present. Still wines, however, are treated to remove CO<sub>2</sub>, but sometimes, it can have few bubbles left over. These bubbles can be removed by using a decanter when pouring the wine to break up the remaining CO<sub>2</sub>.
