Abstracts

The UK has entered the post-BREXIT uncharted territory. It must rely on its own means to navigate successfully through the obstacles. Having exited the common market, it must quickly redefine its relations with the EU, the most important trade and political partner in its vicinity. At the same time, it will try broadening its horizons, redefine its role in the world and shape its future by establishing renewed ties with international partners.

There are multiple risks ahead, with the financial and political being the biggest ones as they can derail its prominence in global affairs. Relying exclusively on its capabilities, the country to use every source of power to bring success. The Integrated Review published this year is an effort to provide the principles with and the framework within which every public organization and agency must plot its course of action for the goal of Global Britain. It is an effort to promote jointness of all the parties involved to bring security, economic prosperity, social stability, technological prominence and cultural recognition.

The UK country report provides an insight on the current and future political and economic landscape with its risks and opportunities, a forecast on defense spending and how this affects the force structure and major equipment programs. Finally, the report presents the country's defense industrial establishment, its driving forces and organization framework, the major players and the paths to entering this market.
