Order backlog declined due to higher deliveries in 2016

The civil aerospace division reported a decline in its order backlog at a CAGR of 4.8%, from US$3.0 billion in 2012 to US$2.5 billion in 2016. The decrease was primarily caused by the delivery of aircraft to customers, representing the end of the production cycle.

Revenue for aviation division grew due to more deliveries

A proportion of the segment's revenues were derived from aftermarket sales, and services represented 31% of its total revenues in 2016, compared with 29% in 2015, largely as a result of the acquisition.

Bell carries out the sales and service of helicopters, tiltrotor aircraft, and spares. The division's revenue decreased by -6.2%, from US$3.5 billion in 2015 to US$3.2 billion in 2016, partly due to fewer commercial aircraft deliveries in 2016. The company delivered 114 commercial aircraft in 2016, as compared to 175 aircraft in 2015. The decline was also due to US$43 million decrease in V-22 program revenue, which intern was primarily due to lower V-22 aircraft deliveries.
