Abstracts

The global adhesives & sealants market size was USD 76.1 billion in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 86.6 billion by 2029, at a CAGR of 2.6% between 2024 and 2029. Water-based technology accounted for the largest segment of adhesive technology & resins. The growth of the water-based adhesives sector is being driven by a steady rise in demand from building and construction projects in North America, as well as the initiation of new infrastructure ventures in India, Taiwan, and other developing countries worldwide. These adhesives exhibit superior adhesion characteristics across various substrates and are widely applied in packaging tasks such as bookbinding, paper bags, cartons, labels, foils, films, paperboard decals, wood assembly, automobile upholstery, and leather binding.

“Paper & packaging by adhesive application accounted for the largest segment of adhesives market.”

The global paper & packaging sector is experiencing significant growth, primarily driven by emerging markets where urbanization is leading to changes in consumer behavior and an increased demand for packaged products. The rise of e-commerce is also contributing to this growth. Economic development and demographic shifts play crucial roles in propelling the packaging industry forward. With anticipated increases in income, consumer spending on packaged goods is expected to rise. Furthermore, there is a notable surge in demand for pharmaceutical products, particularly in developed markets like Japan, driven by rising life expectancies.

“Silicone, by sealant resin type accounted for the largest segment of adhesives & sealants market.”

Leading the sealants market is silicone, closely followed by polyurethane. Silicone-modified polyether sealants, which initially originated in Japan, have now expanded their reach to encompass broader markets in North America and Europe. The surge in demand for silicone sealants stems from their versatile applications in various automobile bonding tasks, including sealing joints, gaps, and cracks, forming low-temperature gaskets, and replacing windscreens. Additionally, they are used for bonding headlamps, fog lamps, tail lamps, lamp covers, caps, and bulb mounting sockets, driving growth within this segment.

“Building & construction, by sealant application accounted for the largest segment of sealants market.”

The building and construction segment holds the largest portion of the sealants market share. Sealants also serve as adhesives in various applications. For example, in structural glazing for glass-walled buildings, sealants are not only used for sealing but also for bonding the glass to the building framework. While sealants may not possess the high tensile strength characteristic of adhesives, they offer superior durability and reliability when exposed to conditions such as high humidity, chemical exposure, or electrical stress. Particularly, silicones facilitate some movement between bonded parts, thereby mitigating shearing stresses resulting from differences in thermal expansion among dissimilar materials.

“Asia Pacific, by region is forecasted to be the fastest segment of adhesives & sealants market during the forecast period.”

Asia Pacific has emerged as a key player in both the production and consumption of adhesives and sealants, propelled by increasing domestic demand, rising income levels, and favorable resource accessibility. It stands as the primary region for automobile manufacturing, with the automotive and transportation sector representing a major consumer of adhesives and sealants. Economic growth across the Asia Pacific region, particularly in emerging markets such as India, Taiwan, Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, and Vietnam, is driving a rise in infrastructure projects, thereby spurring demand for adhesives and sealants in the building and construction domain.
