Abstracts

The COVID-19 outbreak continues to spread around the globe in 2020. As a result, many countries had taken measures like city lockdowns and banned un-essential travel in the first half of the year. Since billions of people worldwide have been forced to school and work at home, the pandemic has opened up business opportunities for various remote office systems and services, network communication software and hardware requirements, and information network security planning. As a result, the global IT service and software market looks promising in 2020. This report provides an overview of the development of the global and Taiwan IT service and software industry and sub-industries, and examines key highlighted topics and future trends of the industry.

List of Topics

Development of the global IT service and software industry over the years from five perspectives: system integration, data processing, IT software, cloud service, and information security

Development of the Taiwan IT service and software industry, touching on scope and definition, and major players in the industry, and includes production value forecast of individual sub-industries for the period 2020-2021
