Abstracts

Alkyl triethoxysilanes are a class of organosilicon chemicals whose structure is the substitution of the last hydrogen atom on the triethoxy silane by an alkyl group. For noble metal catalyzed hydrosilylation reactions. The resulting triethoxysilyl groups are generally valued for attachment to silica surfaces. The compound is bifunctional, with an alkyl group and a hydrolysis-sensitive ethoxysilyl group, so it can act as a crosslinking agent, as well as a coupling agent or adhesion promoter for the treatment of glass fibers and Particulate minerals to form stronger bonds with resins and produce glass fibers with better mechanical properties.
