Abstracts

Cryptocurrency is the digital asset that uses encryption to generate and transfer funds in the form of units of currency without any central administration. The system uses a decentralized distributed ledger technology for establishing standards and governance around the fund transfer and other transactions. This banking system provides the user with low cost and efficient method of payment that minimizes the need for third party verification and processing time. Additionally, this system offers more economic cross-border transaction solutions by reducing the cost associated with trade and documentation processes.
