Abstracts

Behavioural health is the biology of a person's well-being, ability to function in daily life, and behaviours. People with behavioural health issues may experience depression, anxiety, stress, addiction, learning disability, and mood disorder. In this case, behavioural health services can help with treatment. The conditions can be caused by biological factors such as genetics, anatomical structures, and chemicals, or by psychological factors such as trauma. Understanding the root cause of behavioural health issues can aid in determining the best treatment strategy.
