Abstracts

The production of ethylene oxide (EO) is a very fast growing industry in which silver is consumed as catalyst. As a surfactant, EO mainly produces ethylene glycol (76%) and ethoxylates (14%) and other applications (10%) in photoelectric and chemical reactions. In the production process, silver acts as a catalyst to help combine ethylene and oxygen into photoelectric reactions. Although catalysts are not affected by the reactions they support and can be used after the reactions, EO capacity is expected to continue to grow.
