Abstracts

Pork is the world's most consumed meat, a trend that will continue in the near future as demand grows. There are an estimated one billion pigs in the world today. Pig production and pork markets have evolved in many ways over the past few decades, particularly in Latin America and the Asia-Pacific region. Pork production systems have gradually shifted from forest-based to pastureland based and, more recently, to specially designed buildings. The pig production and pork markets are currently witnessing significant developments in their production due to the pressure and increasing demand for sustainable production technologies.

As the global population has grown exponentially, so has the demand for pig production and pork. In addition, significant increases in consumer disposable income, combined with economic developments in countries in Asia Pacific and Latin America, are expected to have a positive impact on global pork consumption. On current trends, existing industrial pork production facilities could pave the way for strengthening and expanding production facilities in the near future. Newer production facilities are moving towards more sustainable production. Growing demand for pigs and pork, the adoption of sustainable production methods and substantial increases in disposable income are expected to drive pig production and pork market growth during the forecast period.
