Abstracts

A high-definition webcam is a camera used to capture live images or video in either analog or digital signals. Today's products are technologically advanced, and they offer better streaming quality, resolution, frame rate, built-in microphone, noise cancellation, and more. Some governments around the world are integrating surveillance systems to protect critical infrastructure and public spaces. Furthermore, the market is witnessing significant growth in residential security and surveillance applications such as home security and outdoor security in smart infrastructure. Webcams are also deployed in live events and industries such as corporate healthcare for remote monitoring. In healthcare, webcams are mainly used for remote patient monitoring to allow telemedicine operators to communicate via store-and-forward and real-time methods.
