Abstracts

Anticoagulants are the cornerstone therapy for thrombosis prevention and treatment. The anticoagulant activity of heparin is heterogeneous with respect to molecular size, and pharmacokinetic properties. Its molecular weight ranges from 3000 to 30 000 Da, with a mean molecular weight of 15 000 Da. The use of heparin ranges from anti-inflammatory, allergic disorders and anti-tumor applications to prevention of infectious disease and use as nanocarriers for drug delivery. Advantages of heparin such as immediate onset of action, short half-life, simple laboratory monitoring, ability to be reversed (protamine), and low cost have led to its broad use.
