Abstracts

Seatbelts are the primary restraint system used in the automotive industry. Higher safety demands and evolution of technology have led to the development of inflatable seatbelts. The inflatable seatbelts have a tubular airbag across its length that inflates to protect the occupants during a crash. The tubular airbag on the belts is filled with compressed gas through a cylinder placed below the seat, unlike the conventional airbag that inflates through rapid chemical reaction. The inflatable seatbelt contains a control unit that signals the inflator to inflate the bag during a collision.
