Abstracts

The orthopedic pedicle screws market is witnessing the development of bioengineered orthopedic pedicle screws that offer biocompatibility and better stability. These screws are non-toxic and are not physiologically reactive, and hence, do not lead to immunological rejection. The use of orthopedic pedicle screw system is increasing significantly in spine surgery owing to its ability to achieve the rigid spinal fixation. However, the loosening of screws is one of the major complications in posterior spinal instrumentation. As a result, researchers are focusing on developing carbon fiber/polyetheretherketone orthopedic pedicle screws that can mitigate this issue.
