Abstracts

Peening shot and beads are small metal balls or glass beads that are used to impact compressive stresses into part surfaces and to deburr sharp edges without removing material. Induced compressive stress improves fatigue strength, the maximum stress that a material can sustain for a specific number of cycles without failure. The compressive residual stress improves fatigue strengths significantly - as long as other factors such as surface roughness and flaws are eliminated. Consequently, peening shot and beads are blasted at the material's surface. Upon impingement, the part surface is compressed by the shot peen media. Shot peening media may be heat-treated to harden or soften the peening shot and beads as necessary. Hardening increases media life. Softening may reduce surface damage or marring on softer alloys.
