Abstracts

The platinum nickel alloy is a platinum alloy composed of nickel added on the basis of platinum. At high temperature, it is a continuous solid solution, and two superstructure ordered phases NiPt and Ni₃Pt are formed at a lower temperature, respectively having AuCu and Cu₃Au type structures. In the platinum-rich alloy, as the nickel content increases, the density of the alloy decreases, the mechanical properties and electrical resistivity at room temperature increase, and the elongation and temperature coefficient of resistance decrease.
