Abstracts

Sugar beet pulp pellets (SBPP) are the pelletized beet residue remaining after the extraction of the juice from sugar production. During the sugar extraction, the beet pulp which contains high amount of water is pressed to extract residual sugar and water, and then dehydrated and pelletized for better preservation. The final product, SBPP, which contains a significant level of fiber, has a longer shelf life and is easier to transport and store. It is commonly used as a feed component for animal feed, in particular feed for ruminants.
