Abstracts

Antennas are used to send and receive frequency signals. Very high frequency (VHF) and ultrahigh frequency (UHF) antennas are designed to transmit and pick up different ranges of frequencies in the broadcast spectrum. To help simplify matters, the frequencies in the broadcast spectrum are grouped into channels. Each channel contains six frequencies. For example, channel 2 is assigned to the 54 to 60 megahertz range; channel 3 is assigned to the 60 to 66 megahertz range; and so on. VHF antennas do not transmit and receive the same channels as UHF antennas.
