Abstracts

The sub prime crisis partially struck the consumption of food from the commercial spaces exhibiting marginal decline in the price of grains and other cash crops during 2008 to 2012. The most effected countries through the crisis were developed countries such as the US, Canada, UK, Germany, Italy and France.

Since, the Latin American countries were dependent on the exports to North American economies such as Canada and the US, they sustained marginal impact of the crisis. The decline in the agro exports hindered the growth of agriculture production in the region translating to declined fungicide application and supplementary industries such as fenpropimorph market.

However, growth in South East Asian and South Asian countries propelled the global fenpropimorph market during the aforementioned historic years due to the constant growth in demand.

The global fenpropimorph market marked a revenue of USD 164.4 Million in 2008 which has expanded to USD 178.2 Million in 2012, marking a CAGR of 2% between 2008 and 2012.
