The Global Defense & Aerospace industry is currently in a transformational phase with defense budgetary cuts putting pressure on linear topline growth & mandating industry OEMs to focus on rationalization of cost base & operations to bolster profitability

besides stressing the need to reduce their degree of dependence on traditional markets significantly. Simultaneously, technological evolution has seen significant progress over recent years with significant technological developments, innovations & breakthroughs that have the potential to extend & broaden the performance spectrum & capabilities of defense hardware besides reducing the total cost of ownership through the operational life span which opens avenues for stimulating demand for replacement & upgrade.

However, budgetary pressures have led to a significant rise in competitive intensity for new defense contract awards as cost competitiveness over hardware's operating life-cycle becomes a critical & decisive parameter and have already started driving the industry on the consolidation path as highlighted by the recent spike in M&A activity.

The industry has responded tremendously & adapted well to the difficult budgetary scenario and most industry OEMs have been able to boost profitability through restructuring of their industrial base despite pressure on topline growth and have been able to realign overall business portfolio leveraging strong cash positions besides strengthening of focus on international markets. The General Aviation industry on the other hand has been making steady recovery with an improving global macroeconomic environment while the Commercial Aviation industry has been on strong growth trajectory driven by technological evolution and strong demand growth emanating from emerging markets.
