Abstracts

This NRG Expert Report provides a global overview of Desalination. It looks at water stress, future and current markets, rising demand for desalination, costs, advantages, current and future technologies and much more. Many parts of the world are experiencing severe water stress with limited fresh water supplies. In some parts of the world water use exceeds renewable water capacity – renewable water is defined as surface and underground water supplies that are replenished by rainwater. These regions often use non-renewable ground water supplies, which are also further down and require more energy to exploit, or exploit underground aquifers resulting in salt water intrusion. Increased industrialisation and urbanisation has also lead to ground water pollution in some regions.

The Global Desalination Report Ed 1 2012 describes the Desalination Market situation in countries with more than 1% of global desalination capacity or the potential for a significant desalination market. This report provides and in-depth overview of the global market, covering the following areas:-

Desalination Technologies

Renewable Energy-Powered Desalination

Future Technologies

Environmental Impact of Desalination

Water Stress, Surplus Users

Private and public Sector Participation.
