Abstracts

Asia Pacific oil and gas supply demand outlook report from OG Analysis provides detailed outlook of regional and country wise forecasts to 2025. Amid decline in oil prices, Asia Pacific leading producers are reducing their investments in upstream segment. In particular, China, Malaysia, Indonesia are largely hit in production front with strong decline in production forecast. Accordingly, the demand- supply balance is expected to widen, giving large scope of business for traders and short term contracts.

On the gas front, the region is expected to continue to increase its dependence on gas, largely to cater power shortages. With plans to increase natural gas role in energy mix and increasing shift towards floating LNG terminals, markets consuming natural gas are set to increase. In particular, demand from developing countries will account for significant amount of increase in demand.

Further, the report also focuses on planned capital expenditures of leading 10 global companies to provide insights into the future of global oil and gas market investments and new areas of development.
