Abstracts

The global Coude Catheter Market size is valued at USD 384.8 million in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 576.4 million by 2032, registering a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 5.18% over the forecast period.

The coude catheter market is witnessing steady growth driven by increasing prevalence of urinary retention, benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH), and urethral strictures requiring catheterisation with curved tip designs. Coude catheters feature a curved or angled tip facilitating navigation through urethral obstructions or enlarged prostates, enhancing patient comfort and catheterisation success. Manufacturers are focusing on hydrophilic-coated catheters for reduced friction, silicone-based catheters for biocompatibility, and colour-coded systems for ease of identification. Growth is supported by rising elderly male population with BPH, increased urology procedure volumes, and expanding home care catheterisation practices. Challenges include risks of urethral trauma with improper insertion, pricing pressures in public healthcare procurement, and infection risks requiring strict sterility standards. Recent developments include Coloplast launching hydrophilic coude catheters for intermittent use, Bard introducing silicone coude catheters with integrated drainage eyes, and Teleflex enhancing coated coude catheter lines for improved patient comfort.

Major trends include development of hydrophilic-coated and silicone coude catheters for reduced friction, enhanced patient comfort, and improved catheterisation outcomes.

Drivers are rising prevalence of BPH and urethral strictures, increasing urology procedure volumes, and adoption of home care intermittent catheterisation practices.

Challenges include risks of urethral trauma with improper insertion, infection risks requiring strict sterility protocols, and pricing pressures in public healthcare systems limiting premium product adoption.

Companies focus on developing ergonomic, low-friction coude catheters with enhanced biocompatibility and easy insertion designs for urology and home care markets.

Recent developments include Coloplast launching hydrophilic coude catheters, Bard introducing silicone-based curved tip catheters, and Teleflex enhancing coated catheter lines for improved comfort.
