Abstracts

The global dicyclopentadiene (DCPD) market is experiencing steady growth, propelled by its crucial role as a building block for a wide range of high-performance materials. DCPD, a byproduct of naphtha cracking, finds extensive application in the production of unsaturated polyester resins (UPRs), hydrocarbon resins, and cyclopentene derivatives, driving its demand across various end-use industries, including construction, automotive, and wind energy. 2024 witnessed a surge in infrastructure investments globally, fueling the demand for UPRs and consequently boosting the DCPD market. This trend is projected to continue in 2025, further solidifying DCPD's position as a versatile chemical intermediate.

Despite its growth potential, the DCPD market faces challenges inherent to its nature as a byproduct. Its supply is directly tied to the production of ethylene, making it susceptible to fluctuations in upstream market dynamics. However, ongoing research and development activities focused on identifying and commercializing alternative production routes, coupled with strategic partnerships across the value chain, are expected to mitigate these challenges and ensure a stable DCPD supply in the future. This report delves into the intricacies of the DCPD market, providing valuable insights into its latest trends, future drivers, challenges, and competitive landscape.
