Abstracts

The global diesel exhaust fluid (DEF) market is experiencing robust growth, driven by the increasingly stringent emission regulations for diesel engines worldwide. DEF, an essential component of Selective Catalytic Reduction (SCR) systems, plays a critical role in reducing harmful NOx emissions from diesel vehicles and equipment. 2024 witnessed a surge in demand for DEF as major economies implemented stricter emission standards, particularly for commercial vehicles and off-road equipment. This, coupled with the growing adoption of SCR technology in emerging markets, fueled market expansion.

The upward trajectory of the DEF market is projected to continue in 2025 and beyond. Factors such as the increasing global vehicle parc, particularly in developing nations, coupled with the ongoing shift towards diesel engines in heavy-duty applications, will further drive demand. Additionally, advancements in DEF production technologies and distribution infrastructure are expected to support market growth. However, factors like the rise of electric and alternative fuel vehicles and the potential for illicit DEF production and adulteration pose challenges that need to be addressed.
