The goji berry extract market is witnessing strong growth driven by increasing demand for superfood ingredients in functional foods, beverages, dietary supplements, and cosmetics. Goji berry extract is rich in polysaccharides, antioxidants, vitamins, and amino acids, used for immune support, anti-aging, and energy-enhancing formulations. Manufacturers are focusing on standardised polysaccharide extracts, organic-certified raw material sourcing, and spray-dried powder forms to support diverse applications. Growth is supported by rising health-conscious consumer trends, expansion of herbal and functional ingredient portfolios, and increasing use in beauty supplements and skin care formulations. Challenges include adulteration risks in supply chains, high production costs for organic goji berries, and limited clinical evidence for specific health claims in regulated markets. Recent developments include Shaanxi Yongyuan Bio introducing organic goji berry extracts for supplements, Ningxia Hongqiaoli enhancing extract purification technologies, and Naturex expanding goji berry extract offerings for beauty-from-within products.

Major trends include rising use of organic goji berry extracts in functional foods, drinks, and beauty supplements targeting anti-aging and immune health markets.

Drivers are growing consumer preference for natural superfood ingredients, increasing application in energy drinks and herbal blends, and expansion of beauty-from-within product categories.

Challenges include adulteration risks affecting extract purity, price volatility in organic berry supply, and regulatory limitations on health claims for immune and anti-aging benefits.

Companies focus on developing standardized polysaccharide extracts, improving extraction and drying technologies for higher bioactivity, and expanding cosmetic ingredient portfolios.

Recent developments include Shaanxi Yongyuan launching organic extracts for dietary supplements, Ningxia Hongqiaoli enhancing purification for polysaccharide-rich extracts, and Naturex expanding goji berry offerings in beauty supplements.
