Abstracts

The global Pericarpium Citri Reticulatae Extract Market size is valued at USD 179.2 million in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 269.8 million by 2032, registering a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 5.25% over the forecast period.

The pericarpium citri reticulatae extract market is witnessing steady growth driven by its use in traditional Chinese medicine for digestive support, phlegm reduction, and appetite stimulation. Also known as chenpi or dried mandarin peel extract, it contains flavonoids such as hesperidin and nobiletin with anti-inflammatory and digestive benefits. Manufacturers are focusing on solvent-free extraction methods, high-purity hesperidin-standardised powders, and integration into digestive health supplements and traditional formulations. Growth is supported by rising interest in herbal digestive aids, expanding nutraceutical portfolios targeting gut health, and use as a flavouring agent in herbal teas and confections. Challenges include raw material adulteration risks, regulatory compliance for food and supplement use, and bitterness affecting formulation palatability. Recent developments include Xi'an Greena Biotech launching hesperidin-standardised chenpi extracts, Shaanxi Jiahe introducing water-soluble chenpi powders for beverages, and Tsumura enhancing Kampo formulations with pericarpium citri extracts for digestive health.

Major trends include development of hesperidin-standardised chenpi extracts for digestive supplements and herbal beverages.

Drivers are increasing demand for natural digestive aids, traditional use in Chinese medicine for phlegm and appetite regulation, and integration into functional beverages and foods.

Challenges include risks of adulteration in bulk supplies, bitterness limiting formulation uses, and regulatory standards for food-grade extracts.

Companies focus on enhancing flavonoid purity, developing water-soluble powders for teas and supplements, and integrating chenpi extracts in Kampo digestive formulations.

Recent developments include Xi'an Greena launching hesperidin-rich extracts, Shaanxi Jiahe introducing soluble powders, and Tsumura enhancing Kampo chenpi formulations.
