Abstracts

The global Plant Placenta Market size is valued at USD 1.5 billion in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 3 billion by 2032, registering a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 8.93% over the forecast period.

The plant placenta market is witnessing niche growth driven by its emerging use in anti-aging skincare, hair care, and nutraceutical formulations. Plant placenta extracts are derived from plant buds and ovules rich in amino acids, peptides, minerals, and growth factors claimed to support skin regeneration and hydration. Manufacturers are focusing on botanical placenta extraction from soy, almond, and apple sources, developing peptide-standardised formulations, and integration into anti-aging serums and hair care products. Growth is supported by rising consumer preference for plant-based cosmetic ingredients, demand for regenerative skincare actives, and innovation in plant cell biotechnology. Challenges include limited clinical validation for anti-aging efficacy, high production costs for cell culture extraction, and formulation stability concerns. Recent developments include Mibelle Biochemistry launching PhytoCellTec plant placenta extracts for skincare, Provital introducing almond placenta extracts for hair revitalisation, and Rahn AG enhancing apple placenta actives for anti-aging serums.

Major trends include development of peptide-standardised plant placenta extracts for anti-aging skincare and hair care applications.

Drivers are rising demand for plant-based regenerative cosmetic ingredients, growth of the anti-aging skincare market, and innovation in plant cell biotechnology.

Challenges include limited clinical evidence for efficacy claims, high extraction costs, and formulation stability and compatibility in emulsions.

Companies focus on developing botanical placenta peptides, enhancing extraction purity, and integrating extracts into premium skincare and hair care formulations.

Recent developments include Mibelle launching PhytoCellTec plant placentas, Provital introducing almond placenta extracts, and Rahn AG enhancing apple placenta actives for serums.
