Abstracts

The global Resveratrol Extract Market size is valued at USD 620.4 million in 2024 and is projected to reach USD 972.5 million by 2032, registering a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 5.78% over the forecast period.

The resveratrol extract market is witnessing strong growth driven by its popularity as an antioxidant and anti-aging supplement. Resveratrol, primarily sourced from Japanese knotweed and grape skin extracts, is used for cardiovascular support, anti-inflammatory benefits, and longevity supplements. Manufacturers are focusing on trans-resveratrol standardisation for bioactivity, micronised formulations for improved absorption, and integration into beauty-from-within and anti-aging products. Growth is supported by rising awareness of resveratrol's cardioprotective and longevity effects, expanding nutraceutical formulations targeting oxidative stress, and functional food fortification trends. Challenges include low bioavailability requiring advanced formulations, sourcing consistency of Japanese knotweed, and regulatory scrutiny on anti-aging claims. Recent developments include Biotivia launching micronised trans-resveratrol capsules, Sabinsa introducing high-purity Polygonum cuspidatum extracts, and Evolva enhancing fermentation-derived resveratrol for supplements.

Major trends include development of trans-resveratrol-standardised extracts with micronised formulations for enhanced bioavailability.

Drivers are increasing demand for anti-aging and cardiovascular health supplements, integration into beauty-from-within products, and antioxidant market expansion.

Challenges include low natural bioavailability, regulatory scrutiny on anti-aging efficacy claims, and raw material sourcing consistency.

Companies focus on micronisation for absorption improvement, fermentation-based production for purity, and standardising trans-resveratrol content for efficacy.

Recent developments include Biotivia launching micronised capsules, Sabinsa introducing Polygonum extracts, and Evolva enhancing fermentation-derived resveratrol.
