Abstracts

Hashimoto's thyroiditis is a condition in which the immune system attacks the thyroid and gradually leads to hyperthyroidism. Production of immune cells and autoantibodies by the body's immune system are characteristics of Hashimoto's thyroiditis, which can damage thyroid cells and compromise their ability to make thyroid hormone. There are various treatment methods for such diseases by using replacement agents such as levothyroxine, triiodothyronine or desiccated thyroid extract. The increasing autoimmune thyroid diseases and deficiency of iodine are responsible for the growth of Hashimoto's Thyroiditis treatment market. Moreover, the increasing exposure to harmful radiation is spreading more diseases which can fuel the growth of this market. Furthermore, there are various national health programs related to thyroid disease that raise awareness regarding such diseases that further fuel the growth of the Hashimoto's thyroiditis market.

However, there are stringent regulation of Food and drug administration regarding medication of Hashimoto's Thyroiditis which act as an obstacle for the market and in addition, the treatment is very prolonged. Although the research and development for any kind of disorder such as Hashimoto's diseases and the cost-effectiveness of the treatment will turn out to be a huge opportunity for the adoption of Hashimoto's Thyroiditis Treatment.

Geographically market is divided into North America, Europe, Asia Pacific and Rest of the World. North America region is growing with a significant growth and is dominating the overall global Hashimoto's Thyroiditis market due to the increasing prevalence of autoimmune thyroid diseases in the US. In addition, the research and development activities in the North American region further fuel the growth of the market. moreover, Asia Pacific is expected to have the highest CAGR during the forecast period 2018-2023. The development of cost-effective treatment and the increasing healthcare investment is the driving factor for Hashimoto's Thyroiditis market in the Asia Pacific region.
