Parkinson's disease incidence has been on a rise in the United States in recent years and it most likely to continue rising in the near future. It has been estimated that at least 500,000 people in the United States currently have been diagnosed with this disease. The society pays a significant amount towards treating this disease in the country. It is estimated that the total cost to the nation exceeds USD 20 billion annually. The risk of this disease increases with age, thus implying that as the population in the US gets older, the impact of this disease on the financial and public health would also increase. Approximately 60,000 Americans are diagnosed with Parkinson's disease each year, and this number does not reflect the thousands of cases that go undetected.
