Diverse rules and regulations are used for making financial reports in various countries according to nature of business and environment of the country. These dissimilarities in regulations standards are known as accounting diversity. For instance, it is required for the companies of USA to record all fixed assets as per historical amounts. On the other hand, the companies in EU use market values for recording fixed assets. In Japan, the expenditures of R&D should be recorded as expenditures, while these are recorded as capitalization amount in Canadian companies. So, various nations use diverse rules and regulations (Collins, 1989). These dissimilarities impact the amounts stated in statement of financial position and statement of profit and loss account.
