Abstracts

Various countries use real GDP per capita for understanding the standard of living (Carrera, 2010). The country with more real GDP per indicates higher standard of living. However, various scholars think that standard of living should be measured by using several other measures as well. This report clearly demonstrates the comparison of various countries. Our selected country is Qatar. In this report 6 countries are analyzed in which low income, high income, middle lower income, and upper lower incomes countries are included. The comparison among real GDP per capita, literacy rate, life expectancy rate and internet user rates will be done. The below mentioned table defines the comparison among 4 indicators of productivity and prosperity. Cont... (800 words of this report)
