Abstracts

Cultural and recreational products include stationary, toys, musical instruments and sporting goods. According to CRI research, in 2016, the market size of cultural and recreational products in China exceeded USD 100 billion.

The total enrollment across all levels of schooling was over 240 million in 2016. The large number of students stimulated the demand for cultural and recreational products. Large demand also comes from enterprises and individual users. With price advantages, Chinese enterprises export a large number of cultural and recreational products every year.

According to CRI analysis, China has become an important production base of global cultural and recreational products. The technology has improved greatly following the expanding scale. However, it still lags behind developed countries in terms of manufacturing technology, technique design and products R&D. Despite great quantities of cultural and recreational manufacturers in China, the majority of them are quite small. With fewer large and famous brands, the market concentration rate remains at a low level.

Currently, technical innovation, marketing channels and brand values gradually become the core of the enterprises when competing with others. However, Chinese cultural and products still have problems of homogeneous products and single marketing approach. The competition centers on ordinary products and the production capacity is increasingly surplus. Some leading enterprises upgrade their products by integrating manufacturing techniques, design and innovation. The consumption area is expanded from student and enterprises to all kinds of people.

Given the economic development and improved residents' income, some famous Chinese brands in high-end market will take larger market share. Additionally, as people are more aware of environmental protection, cultural and recreational products which are innocuous and made of recyclable materials are likely to prevail. It is estimated that in the next few years cultural and recreational products will continue to develop.

In this report, CRI analyzes 9 relevant cultural and recreational products manufacturing enterprises listed in A-share market in China.
