Abstracts

Cloves is an evergreen tree whose flower buds can be used as spices or medicine after drying. Cloves are native to the Maluku Islands in Indonesia (commonly known as the 'Spice Islands') and are now widely planted in India, Madagascar, Sri Lanka, Tanzania, Brazil and other places. Cloves are not only a plant with high ornamental value, but also have important uses in the medicinal and economic fields. For example, cloves can be used as a spice or as a medicine.

Driven by the demand from the spices, food and pharmaceutical industries, the global clove market demand has continued to grow in recent years. Cloves have become an important product in the cooking seasoning and traditional herbal medicine market due to their unique fragrance and extensive medicinal value. According to CRI analysis, the increasing demand for natural medicinal materials and healthy foods among global consumers has promoted the application of cloves in the fields of medicine, health care and food.

Indonesia is an important clove grower and exporter in the world. Indonesia has a long history of clove cultivation and occupies an important position in the international market. The production areas of Indonesian cloves are mainly concentrated in the Maluku Islands. Due to its unique climate and soil conditions, it is very suitable for clove growth. Indonesian cloves are famous for their high quality, with plump buds and rich fragrance, and are very popular in the international market.

Indonesia is also an important clove exporter in the world. According to CRI data, due to strong international market demand in 2024, Indonesia's clove exports increased to 51,200 tons, with an export value of more than US$319 million, a year-on-year increase of more than 200%.

According to CRI analysis, the export market for Indonesian cloves is mainly concentrated in Asia. From 2021 to 2024, the main export destinations for Indonesian cloves are India, China, Saudi Arabia, Bangladesh, Pakistan, Vietnam and other countries. India, the United Arab Emirates and Singapore are the top three export destinations for Indonesian cloves.

According to CRI analysis, the companies that import cloves from Indonesia were mainly some trading companies from 2021 to 2024. The main exporters of Indonesian cloves were mainly Indonesian trading companies and local clove planting companies from 2021 to 2024.

Overall, Indonesia has become an important supplier of cloves in the global market with its unique natural conditions and mature clove planting and processing technology. CRI predicts that in the next few years, with the growth of global clove market demand and technological advancement, the export market for Indonesian cloves is expected to expand further.
