Description

Fungal infection can be categorized into superficial and deep fungal infection. Since superficial infection is strongly infectious and caused by sorts of dermatophytosis fungi which mainly invade skin, hair and nails, it is common and prevalent with its number of cases occupying 90% of total cases of fungal infection. As a result of mass use of antibiotics and other drugs as well as degradation of internal and external environments, human body's immune system has weakened and the incidence of fungal infection especially systemic fungal infection has kept increasing. Therefore, the development of antifungal drugs is increasingly valued.

As clotrimazole is sold at a relatively low price, it grows fast despite a small market scale.
