Linagliptin Introduction

“Linagliptin” is White to yellow crystalline solid soluble in water. Derivative of quinazoline & purine used as hypoglycemic agent in type II Diabetes mellitus medication. Two pharmacological characteristics that sets Linagliptin apart from other DPP-4 inhibitors is that it has a non-linear pharmacokinetic profile and is not primarily eliminated by the renal system, available in various dosage & combination tablets. Linagliptin is a competitive and reversible dipeptidyl peptidase (DPP)-4 enzyme inhibitor which slows the breakdown of insulinotropic hormone glucagon-like peptide (GLP)-1 for better glycemic control in diabetes patients. GLP and glucose-dependent insulinotropic polypeptide (GIP) are incretin hormones that increase the production and release of insulin from pancreatic beta cells and decrease the release of glucagon from pancreatic alpha cells. This results in an overall decrease in glucose production in the liver and increase of insulin in a glucose-dependent manner.
