Executive Summary

World air travel growth has been increasing, registering almost 5% y-o-y growth in January 2015, as most countries are emerging from the economic recession and registering improved economic growth. An overall positive outlook is predicted for the global aviation industry in the coming years, as carriers benefit from falling fuel prices and increased consumer demand. However the lower operational costs would not benefit the consumers, since prices are expected to remain stable, as carriers aim to reinvest profits.

Mature aviation markets of US and Europe are facing intense competition from emerging markets, especially Asia which accounts for 33% of global passenger traffic. However, recent airline disasters have brought on many safety concerns, especially for Asian low-cost carriers.
