Abstracts

According to Statistics MRC, the Global Tube Packaging market is accounted for $6.75 billion in 2017 and is expected to reach $14.12 billion by 2026 growing at a CAGR of 8.5% during the forecast period. Advancements in packaging technology, demand for excellent barrier properties and growth in the cosmetics & toiletries sector are some of the key factors driving the market growth. However, banned raw material cost and availability of substitutes are factors hampering the market growth.

A tube is a unfilled structure, both ends of which are treated in a different way during the manufacturing process and filling. A tube has a round orifice at one end that is closed with the help of a cap. The orifice can be shaped in many different ways, for instance, plastic nozzles that of varied styles and lengths. Tube packaging contains no germs due to the high temperatures during the production process. As it is possible to coat the inside of a tube with special coatings, the tube does not react with its contents.

On basis of material type, laminated segment held considerable market share due to increasing demand for packaging with outstanding barrier protection, which is necessary for packaging pharmaceutical products. By Geography, Europe acquired the largest market share during the forecast period due to its large-scale use in a variety of healthcare and toiletry products. However, due to technological developments in this region, the market is now growing in the European countries. Moreover, Asia -Pacific market is growing at a huge pace in emerging markets of the region such as China, India, and Japan. The reason for the market is the increasing middle-class population of the region and increasing incomes, which drive the demand for easy and safe packaging.
