Abstracts

Summary

China's export takes up only 5% of international Chinese traditional medicine market share, and the proportion tends to decrease further. Standardization of Chinese traditional medicine is the base and precondition of Chinese traditional medicine's modernization and internationalization. The production and circulation mode of Chinese traditional medicine has developed from the traditional single trading in herbal medicines market to co-existing of traditional mode and other GAP production and circulation modes. The report contrasts and analyzes 5 types of production and circulation modes, and indicates the most important mode of Chinese medical plant at present and for the future.
