Abstracts

Telecomspricing launched its 5G Tariff Tracker service in January 2020, then covering some 40 operators across 20 countries. Since then, many operators have launched 5G; in Q3 2023, the Tracker updated every quarter covers 5G pricing for 238 operators in 85 countries.

Additionally, telecomspricing provides insight into the latest trends with its 20+ page report.

The key changes in 5G services include developments in technology aimed at providing improved coverage in urban areas and inside buildings. Together these developments provide improved download speeds as well as increased deployments to improve in-country 5G coverage.

The report identifies that:

5G is made available to a larger audience including the prepaid customer base.

Many sub-brands and MVNOs started to make their services 5G ready with many levying a charge for 5G.

Increasingly speed-dependent offers are added to operators' postpaid portfolios

Operators changes to their offerings from price increases to introducing more unlimited offerings to overhauling their portfolios.

Details of upcoming 5G launches.

the report and the data base provide this information in detail.

Telecomspricing highlights the changes made from update to update which allows the user to easily identify the change; and a brief summary of each change is provided with update.
