Abstracts

Telecomspricing launched its 5G Tariff Tracker in January 2020, then covering some 40 operators across the globe. Since then, many operators have launched 5G and in Q1 2023, the service covers 5G pricing well over 200 providers across the globe.

The service is updated quarterly and coverage expanded to cover the new 5G launches. Additionally, telecomspricing provides an insight into upcoming launches in 2023.

The key changes in 5G services include developments in technology aimed at providing improved coverage in urban areas and inside buildings. Together these developments provide improved download speeds as well as increased deployments to improve in-country 5G coverage. 5G is made available to a larger audience including the prepaid customers, and sub-brands and MVNOs started to make their services too 5G ready. Furthermore, operators make changes to their offerings from price increases to overhaul of their portfolios. Changes made from update to update are marked in red and a brief summary of each change is provided with each update.

The database provides information such as:

Prices (Prices are given in local currencies including and excluding tax as well as in Euros) for 5G services

Inclusive allowances for each plan such minutes, SMS, data (GB), roaming, VAS services, and other benefits offered with a price plan supported by a comment section.
