Abstracts

Global hospital beds market is projected to grow from an estimated $ 4.5 billion in 2020 to around $ 7.7 billion by 2025, exhibiting a CAGR of more than 11% during the forecast period. The global hospital beds market is driven by rising inclination towards home healthcare services across the globe. Moreover, governments across the world are investing more on healthcare infrastructure, which is anticipated to positively impact the growth of market during the forecast period. Also, continuous technological improvements in ICU beds, are further expected to bolster the growth of market over the next few years.

The global hospital beds market is segmented based on type, power, treatment, application, end user, company, and region. Based on type, the market can be categorized into general, pediatric, birthing, bariatric, pressure relief and others (Neonatal, etc.). Of these sub-segments, the general bed type segment dominated the market in 2019 and is expected to maintain its leading position in the market during the forecast period as well. This can be ascribed to fact that general hospital beds are economically priced compared to other specialty hospital beds. Based on power, the market is segmented into manual, semi-electric and electric. The manual segment dominates the market and is projected to maintain its lead over the forecast period as well because of its cost-effectiveness, which leads to higher volume sales in underdeveloped and developing nations. In terms of treatment, the market is fragmented into acute care, long-term care and critical care, out of which, the acute care treatment type segment dominates the market. However, the critical care treatment segment is anticipated to witness fastest growth over the next five years on account of increasing number of patients needing comprehensive care and rising requirement of constant monitoring due to coronavirus outbreak across the globe in the end of 2019.
